Carlton Darby is currently a Board member of the Halton Black History Awareness Society (HBHAS) as the Director of Education Engagement. He first served on the committee as a volunteer in 2015 when he met the Society's Chair, Dennis Scott, assisting with the team's social media accounts and events held throughout the year. Carlton's past experience includes volunteering in his school and greater community in a variety of different capacities, some of which involved mentorship and visionary programs at his alma mater, Corpus Christi C.S.S. He is currently in his third year of studying Chemical Engineering at the University of Waterloo (UW), where he has participated in and supported multiple student-run clubs. Some of these include the Black Association for Student Expression (UWBASE), the African Student Association (UWASA), the Association of Caribbean Students (ACS) and the National Society of Black Engineers (UW NSBE). Carlton is working to liaise long-term relationships with groups such as these to further serve the black community.
